

Monthly Comment

After a stellar 2019, markets began the new decade in a good mood but quickly changed towards the end of January. The main driver for the sudden change was concerns over the coronavirus. Optimism following the phase one trade deal between US and China was quickly forgotten. Tensions between US and Iran de-escalated swiftly and was barely noticeable in the markets. UK finally left the EU and the elections in US are starting. Economic data continues to show improvements and fears of a near-term recession has decreased significantly. Developed equity markets had a flattish month while emerging markets, and Hang Seng in particular, was negatively impacted by the corona outbreak. Commodities were also affected, oil and metals had a sharp decline explained by expectations on less demand for transportation, logistics and construction. The best asset class for January was clearly bonds, often regarded as safe havens during times of uncertainty. Government bonds outperformed equity markets and US dollars and Japanese Yen appreciated. Factor strategies had a rough month and ended slightly negative.
